Dominique Perrault

Clermont-Ferrand (FR), 1953

Perrault graduated in architecture at the École Nationale Supérieure des Beaux-Arts and then specialised in urban planning at the École des Ponte et Chaussées and in history at the École de Hautes Etudes en Sciences Sociales. In 1981, he opened his first studio which jumped into the international limelight when he won the competition for the Bibliothèque Nationale de France, at the tender age of 36. The project was completed in 1995. He has since created major buildings such as the Berlin Velodrome (1999) EWHA University in Seoul (2002) and the New Marinsky Theater in Saint Petersburg (which is currently being built). He has taught at the universities of Barcelona, Brussels, and Zurich. Perrault has received several awards such as the Grand Prix National de l'Architecture Française and the Mies Van der Rohe Award.
